Best Practices for On-Campus Recruiting

For in-person campus recruiting events, such as career fairs or information sessions, assemble a team of well-informed, personable, and enthusiastic employees who can answer questions. This group of employees should include both recent graduates and older individuals.

If you have identified alumni of the university working with the organization, bringing them to on-campus recruiting events is a plus as they can share their personal experiences with current students. While having students talk with young professionals who recently graduated from the university can be a productive approach, seasoned, higher-level employees have vital information to share with college students who want to learn about a potentially long-lasting career at a company.

Bring current interns! Interns can bring a fresh perspective and share information their peers want to hear such as approaches to applying, company culture, and work experiences.

TIPS:
- Have a compelling company career site
- Have a personalized communication strategy
- Develop appealing job descriptions and flyers
- Develop an employee influencer network

Developing an internship program is a dedicated initiative and will deliver enormous value to employers and students. To support our employers in designing an internship program, we offer specialized services including internship development, tailored resources, and recruitment tools.

Academic Credit

Academic credit is best left up to the intern. The student is responsible for making his/her own arrangements unless you are working directly with the university or college. Should the student choose to receive academic credit for their internship, he/she will advise the internship supervisor or mentor of the professor’s requirements. These requirements may vary between universities, departments and even professors within a single department.

How to Build an Internship

- Consider logistics (compensation, workspace, equipment, onboarding, management)
- Create project-based tasks
- Write a clear and effective job description
- Create community building and development opportunities
- Develop methods to track progress and provide feedback

Intern Supervisor Best Practices

- Set clear expectations, learning objectives and goals
- Host onboarding meetings/trainings and weekly 1:1 check-ins to ensure progress is being made
- Share communication preferences and office culture and attire guidance
- Be a resource and available for questions
- Provide mentorship and development opportunities

Typical Hours

- Local part-time semester interns: minimum of 10 hours, up to 20 hours
- Full-time summer interns: 40 hours per week, 6-12 weeks per college
- Engineering Co-ops: Students typically complete at least one summer and one long semester of full-time work with the same employer
