This presentation by Dr. Toribio examines the rich bilingual practices that Spanish heritage students bring to K-16 classrooms, emphasizing that understanding these practices can help educators leverage learners' linguistic, metalinguistic, and analytical skills for further growth. Drawing on relevant research, the talk focuses on studies that advocate for hybrid language practices and translanguaging curricula. It aligns with calls for recognizing the value of bilingual speech in both scholarship and teaching, highlighting how these practices can support the success and well-being of heritage bilinguals.
